Nouthetic biblical counseling (e.g., Adams, 1970) was not included given its lack of research and the distrust of some of its leaders in using empirical methods. Specific models with research are briefly described with references provided for further details on the approach. Table 1 summarizes all the studies found

"Nouthetic counseling is counseling that uses Scripture to confront people about their sin with the goal of helping to restore them to usefulness (Gal. 6:1)."

Several years ago we began receiving some comments and correspondence from individuals who had been exposed to Nouthetic counseling.

As a dance ethnologist, I see a very important similarity between spiritual healing through dance and Dadirri, the indigenous approach to healing trauma: it is the end result of loving acceptance toward ourselves. The natural force of movement in deep awareness is key here. In listening in stillness there's a contemplative movement deep inside.
