First, Do No Harm is an essential book for each and every person present on earth although, it wouldn't be that way. It is a book addressing the many complexities of being a doctor. The question it keeps on asking and which also taps into our conscience, is that whether medicine is ultimately aiming to do too much.

~~First, do no harm | definition of First, do no harm by ...~~

The first line reads, "First do no harm." According to the editorial, physicians who prescribe opioids to treat pain patients may be violating the Hippocratic Oath, because "a doctor's first concern is to not do anything to make things worse." However, the editorial got it wrong.

~~Do No Harm! How does this relate to Situational Awareness?~~

A literal reading of "first do no harm" would, therefore, lead the clinician to do nothing at all. A more accurate formulation is "first do no net harm." The Latin translation does not roll off the tongue: "primum non plus nocere quam succurrere" ("above all, do not harm more than succour").
