'We'll Always Have Summer' is the final book in Jenny Han's wonderful 'Summer' trilogy. I wanted this finale to go out on an explosive BANG – instead I got lukewarm and slight disgruntlement with this, the final installment to a wonderful contemporary romance series . . . The book kicks off with a betrayal.

Plot Summary. College freshman Belly Conklin was in love with Conrad Fisher for most of her life. Her mother Laurel was best friends with Conrad’s mother, Susannah, so Belly and her mom would go stay at the Fishers’ summer house in Cousins Beach every summer. Belly’s childhood dreams of dating Conrad came true in high school, but Conrad’s emotional distance eventually broke them up.

We'll Always Have Summer is the final book in Han's Summer trilogy which begins with The Summer I Turned Pretty and continues in It's Not Summer Without You. This book is narrated by Belly with a few chapters from Conrad. My only complaint is I wish we had more from him because it was so fascinating to finally see things from his point of view.
