What Makes Professional Whitening Different? Many forms of teeth whitening, including over-the-counter (OTC) products, prescription gels and professionally applied treatments at your dentist's office, contain carbamide peroxide as their primary bleaching agent, according to the American Dental Association (ADA). But the composition of chairside bleaching is what often separates it from the rest, making professional teeth whitening cost a bit higher as a result.

~~How Professional Teeth Whitening Is Done~~

Professional teeth whitening uses a higher peroxide. Your dentist will very possibly use a higher dosage of carbamide or hydrogen peroxide in his or her office than most at-home whiteners allow (Haywood, 2008). Over-the-counter whitening strips, for example, use just a slight amount of peroxide, roughly six percent.
